

Absolutely not. Students gain practical lawyering skills useful in any law practice where lawyers have individual clients. Clinic participation also demonstrates interest in public service work and community involvement, valued by many employers.